

Sinclair is obviously making a corporate in-kind contribution while simultaneously making a mockery of the concept known as "news." If they want to run a political ad, fine, but do it by the rules everyone else plays by.

Also, the obvious implications for "localism" are made abundantly clear when a main office dictates what everyone else is going to see on an issue. There are far too many voices being undemocratically drowned out through media consolidation of PUBLIC airways.